THE EMPTY HANDS

The Gospel reading for the Feast of the Epiphany of the Lord is always Matthew 2:1-12, which is part of the “Infancy Narrative” found in Matthew’s Gospel. It relates the story of the three—although Mt 2:1-12 never explicitly mentions how many—Magi from the East who bring gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh to the baby Jesus. For this Sunday’s reflection on the feast of the Epiphany, I would like to borrow some main ideas from Timothy Radcliffe, an English Dominican and a spiritual author to whom I have been greatly indebted.

In his book Why Go to Church? The Drama of the Eucharist, Fr. Radcliffe mentions, among other parts concerning the “drama” of the Mass, the part on the preparation of the gifts. We know that bread and wine really represent ourselves, the totality of our being, to be offered to God and shared with one another. In the overall scheme of things, everything comes from God and everything will ultimately return to him—in traditional Catholic terminology this is known as the exitus-reditus schema. Therefore, as we present the gifts of bread or wine, we should also present our complete selves to the Lord: leaving us empty-handed. This is what the Magi did. After they have offered their gifts to Jesus, they leave with empty hands; and thus, are free to receive whatever gifts the Lord may give them. This stands in contrast to Herod, who, because of his insecurity, sees the child Jesus as a threat to his kingship. Herod’s hands are too full and have no space to receive the gifts of God.

Timothy Radcliffe then goes on to relate the story of a certain German journalist named Andrea English, who had been very critical of the late Pope John Paul II. In 1999, he accompanied John Paul to India as the latter went to visit the home of Mahatma Gandhi. Of course all this was not that appealing to the journalist. It was not until his conversation with an elderly Indian woman, who had known Gandhi and had been sent by the Indian government to witness this event, that Andrea English underwent a conversion. She told him the story of Gandhi: that he only had his two empty hands and his Hindu belief. And yet, the powerful British Empire was unable to crush him. In the same way, Pope John Paul II did not really have anything either. With just his two empty hands and his belief in a liberating God, he was able to stand up to the Russians and communism... It was at this moment that the German journalist experienced a moment of revelation: the power of the empty hands.

Like the Magi, we also have to come to the altar of the Lord with empty hands. We may come with hearts/hands too full—full of worries, anxieties, etc. But in the end we cannot be insecure like Herod, with our hands too full. Eventually we have to trust enough to let go of whatever our hands have been trying to cling on. The story of the Magi on this feast of the Epiphany reminds us that nothing belongs to us. I constantly have to remind myself—and it is not easy—that my life and ministry do not belong to me. Ultimately everything belongs to God. We came into this world with empty hands and will leave this world with empty hands: but only with empty hands can we receive the gifts of God... Happy Epiphany!

Father Anthony Hien Vu

The Year of Mercy

Into the Heart of Mercy

YOUR LIGHT HAS COME! LET US REJOICE AND BE GLAD!

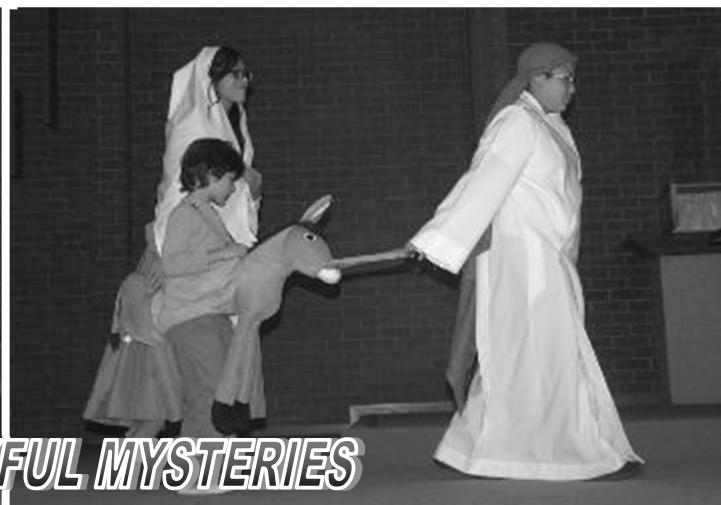

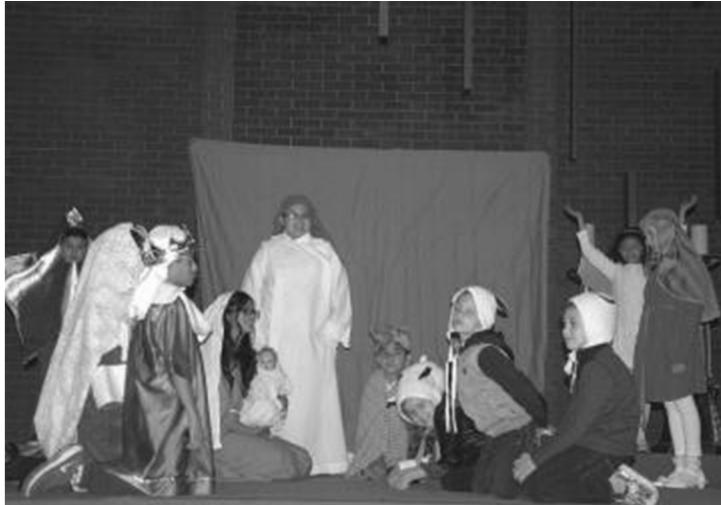

For a number of people, the most vexing mystery about the Epiphany is where to put the camels in the family creche. They just never fit neatly into the space allotted. Perhaps that's the nature of mystery itself, never fitting into the space we allow for it. When it comes to the Epiphany, do we actually allot any space at all for the mystery of it?

When it comes to matters that are strange or wondrous, corroboration is a very important concept. We dearly love to have our perceptions validated, so it is always nice to have someone corroborate our view or version of events. Not many people are aware that the Greek word for witness is "martyr." In the way the Greeks viewed the word martyr, witness had a double edged meaning. In one sense, it meant to literally see and testify to what you saw. In the other sense, it meant to be used to demonstrate or make a statement about something. The Magi in the Gospel story of the Epiphany are actually involved as martyrs in both senses of the word witness. Epiphany, meaning manifestation in Greek, was literally the intention of the Magi, who were martyrs in the story. St. Matthew used them to demonstrate to the world that Jesus was the long awaited Messiah. Herod wanted to use them as witnesses to testify to the identity of the child whom he feared. The Church has used them as witnesses for twenty centuries to affirm how extraordinary this child was.

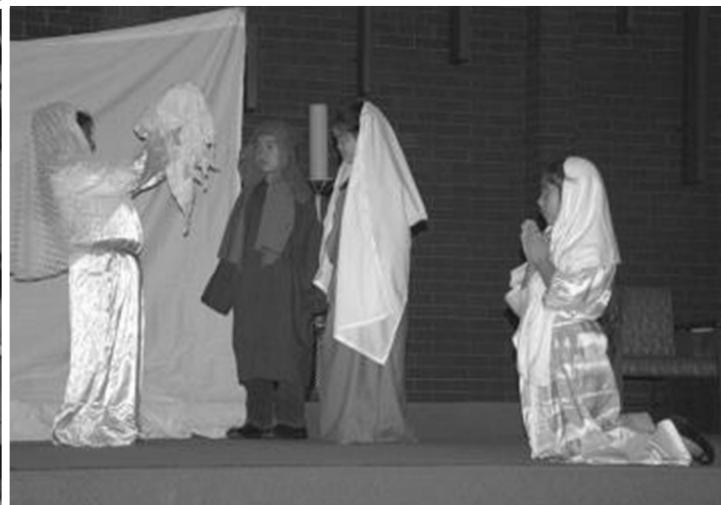

The idea of light in both the first reading and the Gospel is used in a metaphoric sense. The people of the ancient world were quite conversant with the planets and constellations visible in the night sky. The notion that the Magi (astrologers, seers, philosophers, or whatever) might have misinterpreted a celestial phenomena is backward projection of skeptics from our time. Because few of us today are familiar with the stars and planets, we think they might have possessed the same disinterest in such things as we have. The interesting thing is that the Magi were the only ones who actually noticed or followed the unusual star.

In the Holy Year of Mercy, it may be fruitful to consider manifesting the light of mercy in a world filled with hatred and vengeance. Epiphany today may well mean manifesting the light of mercy to a world filled with darkness. That requires the willingness to martyr ourselves. Few will corroborate mercy as a successful strategy for dealing with the problems of the world. "Love your enemies" and "Turn the other cheek" don't seem like powerful responses to those who hate and hurt us. Mercy is a radical response to the message of the Gospel. The price of martyrdom has always been high, which is why the Beatitudes are more necessary than ever. The wisdom of the world encourages us to look for the payoff or find the easy road. When Jesus says, "Pick up your cross and follow me..." I think he was inviting us to martyrdom. That doesn't mean we have to die to comply, it means we have to be willing to walk our talk. That is how we witness in the Holy Year. We enter into the heart of mercy, because that is the journey we are called to take. Just like the Magi, who didn't know where they were being led, they just picked up and followed. So, rather than focus on the literal elements of the story, perhaps we should allow the light to lead us into those dark corners we would rather avoid. Arise Jerusalem, for the glory of the Lord is upon you.
